FYI

Really Good Google -ing

It’s that time of year. You’re in the middle of writing papers, doing assignments & projects. You’re also trying to find that perfect something and to finish off your online shopping…there just aren’t enough hours in the day!

Fortunately there’s a wonderful infographic created by the folks at Hack College & shared out by Josh Catone, Features Editor at Mashable.

Spend a little time reviewing this & you’ll not only be saving yourself a lot of wasted time but you’ll have added enormously to your skillset. Just click on the link below.

Did you notice Josh even mentioned part of the search process is deciding when to use the databases the Library makes available to you here & when to use Google or Google Scholar?

If you’d like help with framing your search or identifying the resources you could/should use feel free to get in touch. I’d love to help. My contact info is on the side-bar of each page here, or you can come on down to the Library.

Winter’s Beauty…
Holly in Winter

I’m biased but I think he was a beautiful puppy
Loki—in winter

Holly aka Ilex aquifolium
- Can grow Big (up to 70' trees!)
- Associated with Saturn-Roman sun god
- Druids valued its evergreen nature
- Celts used it to repel evil spirits & shelter fairies
- Person who brings 1st sprig into the home “wears the pants” that year
- At one time Christians were forbidden from using holly to decorate homes at Christmas (too close to pagan Roman Saturnalia practices)
- Berries toxic to humans
- The wood's been used as a substitute for ebony (when dyed)

Ivy aka Hedera helix
- Can grow everywhere! It’s either “ground cover” or an invasive
- Another evergreen plant used to decorate in the winter
- Associated with the Roman god Bacchus
- Considered the “female” element of these two plants

The Holly & the Ivy
